

How much does a home relay protector cost

Article Overview

Home relay protectors typically range from $100 to $1,500 depending on type, brand, and features.

Typical Price Range

The cost of home relay protectors varies widely based on whether the device is electromechanical, digital, or microprocessor-based. Basic electromechanical relays for residential use can start around $100–$300, while advanced digital or microprocessor-based relays with fault diagnostics, IoT integration, and smart monitoring can cost $500–$1,500 or more . Used or surplus relays may be available at lower prices, often 20–40% less than new units, depending on condition and supplier .

Factors Affecting Price

- Type of Relay: Microprocessor-based relays are more expensive than electromechanical models due to advanced features and digital communication capabilities .
- Brand and Manufacturer: Leading brands like ABB, Siemens, and General Electric typically command higher prices due to reliability and compliance with standards .
- Features: Relays with smart monitoring, remote communication, or integrated surge protection increase costs by 15–30% compared to basic models .
- Market Conditions: Supply chain disruptions, semiconductor shortages, and regional demand can cause price fluctuations
