

How to Choose a Pigtail Jumper Cable in Slovakia

Article Overview

Select a pigtail jumper cable by matching connector type, fiber mode, length, and quality to your network or electronics setup.

Determine the Purpose

First, identify whether you need a fiber optic pigtail for permanent splicing or a patch cord/jumper for flexible connections. Pigtails are fused to fiber cables and installed in termination boxes for long-term links, while patch cords connect devices like switches or routers temporarily or for testing purposes .

Choose the Connector Type

Match the connector to your equipment. Common types include LC, SC, ST, and E2000. For example, if your switch has LC ports, use LC pigtails. Avoid mixing connector types in the same zone to simplify maintenance and future upgrades .

Select Fiber Mode

Decide between singlemode and multimode based on distance and speed requirements:

- Singlemode: Ideal for long-distance or high-speed links.
- Multimode (OM3/OM4): Suitable for shorter distances and future-proofing 10G net...
