

What kind of baseboard goes well with a straight-grained eucalyptus cabinet

Overview

Medium density fiberboard (MDF) is economical, easy to use and a popular option for moulding, trim and baseboards. MDF is an engineered wood product made by combining wood fibers together with pressure treatment. It has no natural wood grain, so these baseboard materials do not. A cabinet baseboard, often referred to as a toe kick, is the recessed or finished panel located at the bottom of base cabinets. In 2026, cabinet baseboards are. The right baseboard trim styles can ground a space, add architectural character, and make a room feel finished in a way that paint and flooring alone simply can't. This guide breaks down the most. The bullnose baseboard is known for its smooth, rounded edge. The gentle curve at the top creates a soft, friendly aesthetic that works well in casual, family-oriented spaces. Use them to sharpen floor-to-wall transitions, tie in door casings, and create a consistent design language across rooms. This guide explains how to choose profiles, heights, materials, and colors for. Wall trim, baseboard style, and the overall profile of the millwork you choose, has a quiet way of elevating a room, adding dimension, balancing proportions, and helping your entire home feel more intentional. But with so many choices, where do you even start?

Let's look at some of Riverside Millwork Group's favorites and what.
